

WHICH GOD?

DATA SHEET COMPARISON OF RELIGIONS

SUMMARY: This lesson contains the collected results on various religions in accordance with the objective criteria of the preceding lesson.

The questions asked on the previous 3 pages for comparison are asked in an attempt to do an impartial comparison. The method for trying to be impartial was to ask a set of smaller questions which have reasonably objective answers.

Presumably the more positive the numbers for a religion, the more likely it is to be true. However, there are questions which if answered negatively would seriously cast doubt on a religion being from God. A primary question would be whether the original documenters made a claim it was from God. One would seriously question whether it was from God if the original documenters did not claim it was from God, but later believers decided to make that claim.

The grid on the following two pages is slightly different. The next page takes the teachings by the original documenter of the religion and scores on that basis. Second following page takes the information from the next page and adds information from claimed historical sources from that group. This applies to Christianity, Islam, and Mormonism. An instance of this is that Christianity both provides scientific prophecies as a proof, and links back to the Old Testament as its source for additional scientific prophecies.

Islam is somewhat different in that whereas Christianity has a heritage which goes back to Abraham through Isaac, Islam has a heritage going back to Abraham through Ishmael, Isaac's half-brother. All the scientific proofs in the Old Testament happen after Abraham, so the scientific proofs in the Old Testament would not be in Islam's heritage. This means that Islam had no scientific statements through the original documenters, being Mohammad, and has no heritage through the applicable portion of the Old Testament.

This is an attempt to be as impartial as possible. However, no human is truly impartial. The previous three pages are provided as blanks for you put in additional studies or information. Additionally, this is an attempt to quantify a whole mass of information in a small space to the best of our knowledge. If you have corrections to suggest, please let us know.
